Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Excerpt from The Princes of Peele The hall of an old-fashioned country house. Background, a massive oaken staircase; on the walls, several handsomely-framed prints; a trophy, composed of a fox s mask and half a dozen brushes and stags antlers, arranged as a hat-stand. In the foreground, vases filled with ferns and flowers. The comely couple standing in the sunlight, which streams in through the doorway, are the master and mistress of the house, Leonard Prince and Dorothy his wife. He is drawing on his gloves, she putting a gardenia in his buttonhole. Mrs. Prince is the stouter, albeit not the taller of the two, a matron of somewhat imposing presence, well-favored, with dark eyes and a fair skin. Mr. Prince, not having thickened with age like his spouse, looks younger than his years, which are far on in the fifties; his hair and mutton-chop whiskers are turning white, his comely face is bright with health and high spirits, and his keen gray eyes, strong white teeth, and square jaws bespeak a vigorous constitution, a sanguine temperament,...
