These and other contributions from the same pen caused at one time a considerable sensation, and a believer in the representative philosophy of Emerson might fairly have said that at last the time of Entozoa had come, and with it the man. The question is still occasionally seriously debated. Crops raised on Irrigated Farms. Ill The crops grown upon the various sewage farms are of great variety. Professor Corfield mentions a catalogue of thirty-eight different vegetables which have been raised upon the Lodge Farm at Barking. Various cereals head the list, then follow in due order grasses, cabbages, root crops, potatos, salads, currants, and berries of all kinds. The crop mostly grown is the Italian rye-grass, which is said to be more suitable for the elaboration of milk in the cow than any other. Mr. Hone considers this...
